Special Issue on: Investors decision-making based on complex information from networked economies and unstable markets

Guest Editor: Dr. Massimiliano Kaucic, University of Trieste, Italy

Markets are currently affected by great instability and uncertainty, mainly due to the swift global changes in the social and political systems. Thus, operating in such economic environment is troublesome for both institutional and non-institutional investors. However, thanks to the amazing improvements in information technology, agents are able to handle a large range of knowledge, based on press and professional data providers, in order to promptly react to market evolutions.

In this special issue, we intend to shed light on the way in which the different types of information influence the sentiment of financial practitioners, their decision process and their investment styles. Moreover we try to understand how big data learning techniques and computational management tools can be integrated in order to better represent human behavior and market sentiment.

Papers covering other related issues are also welcomed.

MIC 2017 Conference

This special issue will carry revised and extended versions of selected papers presented at the MIC 2017 Management International Conference “Managing the Global Economy” in Monastier di Treviso, Venice, Italy, 24–27 May 2017 (<http://www.mic.fm-kp.si/>).

However, submissions from researchers unable to participate in the conference are also welcome and encouraged.
